We safeguard your assets at SEI Private Trust Company

Many of the communications you receive from us will come from SEI Private Trust Company (SPTC), which is a wholly owned subsidiary of SEI. As a federally chartered limited purpose savings association, SPTC segregates your assets from its own assets and holds them as custodian. Assets held in accounts at SPTC are not assets of SPTC. Therefore, SPTC creditors have no such claim to these assets.

Your investments are held in your name at SPTC. The company may not pledge, hypothecate or margin assets that it holds in custody. Because of its reputation in the banking industry, many leading banks use our trust accounting system—the very same operations platform that administers your account.

A constant search for New ways, new answers to benefit clients.

As a leader in the financial services industry, our history of innovation stands the test of time.

Some examples over the last 50 years:

In 1968, SEI's leaders recognized the need for faster and better training for bank loan officers, and founded the company to create the first computer-simulated loan workout training technology.

In the 1970s, SEI created a completely automated bank trust accounting system. Through TRUST 3000® and the SEI Wealth PlatformSM, we have significant relationships with trust departments from 10 of the 20 largest (by asset) U.S. banks.¹

In the 1980s, we helped change the way people look at investing by integrating modern portfolio theory with comprehensive asset allocation models—a process that now is an investment cornerstone.

In the 1990s, Gil Beebower (then an SEI employee), along with Gary Brinson and Brian Singer, authored the original landmark asset allocation study concluding that asset allocation, not market timing or stock selection, is the primary driver behind how different portfolios generate different returns.

SEI also led the development of a fee-based operating platform for independent advisors, aligning advisors' business interests with their clients' investment success.

SEI was also among the first companies to offer the manager-of-managers concept to both institutional and individual investors. Today, clients are served by leading specialist money managers—firms such as Neuberger Berman Investment Advisers and Lazard Asset Management—using the same sophisticated investment philosophy and process developed to serve institutional investors.

We introduced an asset management program for corporate pension plans that enables the CFO to more fully address how pensions impact the company's financial position. Companies such as The J.M. Smucker Company and Panasonic use our asset management approach.²
